How to have a 48 hour day with Don Aslett (accomplish twice as much and have fun)

How does a person start a business while going to college which eventually is worth millions, raise a family, pen more than 40 books, speak for numerous corporations and organizations, and live life to the fullest?

The answer is not in our genes or in the tools we use, or even the management of time at all. Don Aslett says it is all in how...well let Don tell you in person. Laugh your way through a pre-conference that not only will bring smiles to your face, but smiles to the way you handle all of the things you want to accomplish in your life. Don Aslett – Go For It!

The Young & the Restless: A New Breed of Library Customer

In 2007, the Idaho Commission for Libraries presented the results of a study in which individuals ages 12-24 years were asked about their perceptions of libraries. The report, which can be found at <http://libraries.idaho.gov>, demonstrates that today's younger adults are interested in library services delivered in a welcoming environment and accessible using up-to-date communication methods.

During this preconference, you will learn about the services needs of the 'young and the restless' through a presentation by library leader Aaron Schmidt, author of walkingpaper.org. Aaron will give us his ideas about serving younger adults, and then facilitate a panel discussion covering existing library programs that meet the needs of teens and young adults. You'll get to see the video outtakes from the study's focus groups and take part in the discussion about meeting their library needs.

Ticketed Event: No lunch

This program is sponsored by the Idaho Commission for Libraries with funding through the Library Services and Technology Act (LSTA) of the Institute of Museum and Library Services (IMLS).
